Too little drugs, too many organs?

By Donald E. Harte, D.C.

When asked what I think of taking a half an aspirin a day to ward off heart attacks, I respond that I would approve, if you could show me a lab test proving that you are deficient in aspirin.

In some areas of the country, healthy breasts are removed from young women to prevent breast cancer. Should we revive the Aztec ritual of cutting out hearts, this time to prevent heart disease? How about the practice of removing healthy appendixes whenever they are anywhere in the abdominal cavity, in order to prevent appendicitis, despite the fact that the appendix is a part of our immune system?

It appears that their (medicine's) view is that we are mere pieces of red meat, without any ability to self-heal and self-regulate, requiring the ministrations of white-coated high priests for anything positive to happen. These ministrations basically consist of the addition of foreign chemicals, or the subtraction of organs, or parts of organs, by surgical intervention. I must conclude that the prevailing medical core belief is that we are born with a deficiency of drugs and an excess of organs. Enrobe this belief in the multi-billion dollar advertising campaigns of the pharmaceutical corporations, in the sanctity of government-sponsored public health announcements, in the majesty of the latter-day temples known as hospitals, and in the sociologically sacred place of the medical doctor him or herself...and you still have a totally irrational and disrespectful belief.

There is another viewpoint. In chiropractic, we understand that there is an innate intelligence that directs our 25 to 40 quadrillion cells, which we are comprised of, to act in concert. This innate intelligence is the force that unites the sperm and the egg, runs your heart, has your kidneys filter the blood, keeps your hormones in balance, digests your food, and so on, without the necessity of your conscious effort or intellectual comprehension. Cut yourself, and the body will heal it. Break a bone, you will likely get a cast. But who actually heals the bone? The body is not stupid. Certainly, we must realize that our simple "Educated Mind," even with the full majesty of the modern medical-pharmaceutical-governmental complex, is no math, and will never be a match, for the ultimate wisdom of innate intelligence.

Donald E. Harte, D.C., can be reached at Family Wellness Chiropractic, 1100 Sir Francis Drake Blvd., Kentfield, CA 94904, or by calling 460-6537. Another View on Health appears bi-weekly in Monday's Lifestyles. Physicians affiliated with Marin General Hospital, alternative medical practitioners, the Marin Medical Society and others will contribute to it. To find out how to write for this column, contact the Marin I.D., P.O. Box 8150, Novato, 94948.