Progesterone

Testosterone

DHEA

Estradiol supports and protects tissue structures needing estrogen.

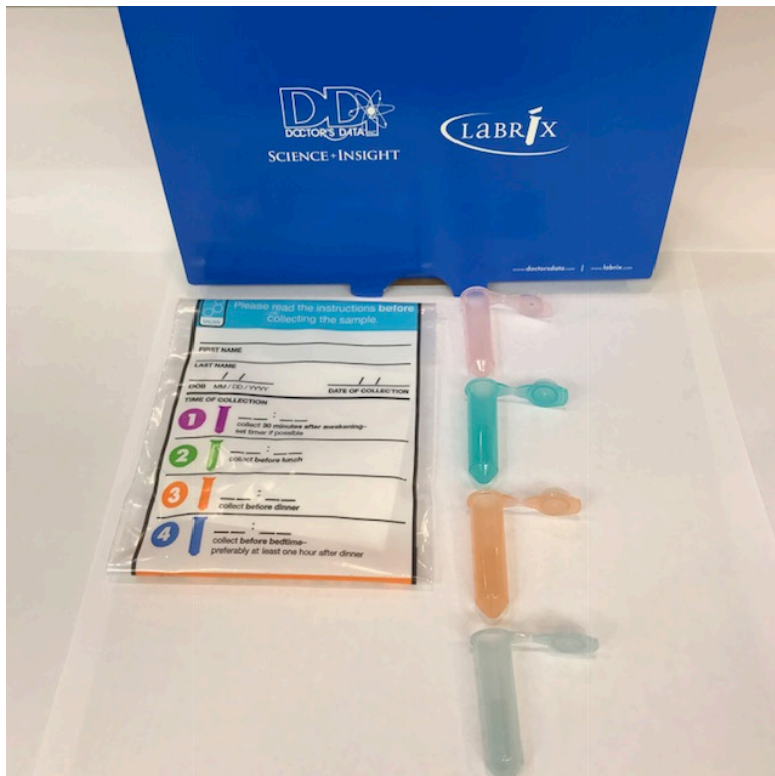

Estriol gives muscle strength in women.

Estrone has very little stimulating activity. It primarily is converted into Estradiol to support the tissues needing estrogen.

Progesterone is supportive in multiple areas. From the brain to breast to bones and babies.

Testosterone is needed in a small amount with women to balance the effects of estrogen.

DHEA comes from the Adrenal Glands and is converted into estrogens. It gives a window into the health of the adrenals.

Saliva are cells that are expressed from glands in the body. They contain hormones just like the cells found in a blood test. Four samples are used to get a overall daily output average.
